

Factors in an experiment may be considered fixed or random

use fixed effects to make inferences only about the particular k levels of the factor observed in the study ex: gender, treatment, or dose use random effects when these levels are a sample from a population of levels ex: subjects, observers, and clinic sites